The red white and blue colors in the flag were inherited from England and Scotland. The combination of stripes colors and stars was an American idea. The red in the flag has been interpreted to mean deflance to all forms of tyranny and oppression, the white is indicative of purity and charrity, while the blue ropresents justice and fidelity. In the American navy a special flag is displayed during the Sunday religious service—a square pennant of white, charged with a blue cross emblematic of faith, and this is the only flag that is permitted to fly.

Figures such as these tell most cloquently the story of the phenomenal development of the country during the past decade. That the prosperity of the railroads is intimately associated with that of the whole country is proved by the fact that in the twelve months that followed the panics the railways suffered a loss of over $330. 00,000 in gross earnings.
